Located in northeastern Germany, Berlin is populated with 4 million people from approximately 180 nations. The city is a major center of culture, politics, sports, and science in the EU. Berlin has the role of a global hub for transportation from all kinds, and is one of the most popular tourist destinations in the European Union.

The city is well-known for its festivals, contemporary architecture, nightlife, culture, efficient public transportation networks and a high quality of living. Berlin has become a global center for young people and many artists attracted by a unique liberal lifestyle and modern zeitgeist.

When the loathed Berlin Wall fell down in 1989, thousands celebrated joyfully at Brandenburg Gate to congregate a new era - and ever since Berlin is functioning as the capital of the reunified Deutschland and one of the EU's most fascinating cities.
